It is a positive move to see the remaining historic building converted into a new use and that is welcomed. There is little of historic significance left internally in the mill building so the conversion should be fairly straight forward.

In terms of the demolition, these are mid 20th century buildings of little merit so I do not object to their removal

The residential is in outline form but is supported by a D&A that is well detailed and well thought out. If the reserved matters came in based on this document then it is likely to be considered acceptable in design terms, subject to housing design.
