This historic building is of significant local and national importance- it was the meeting place for a major Luddite attack in 1812 which is taught in schools up and down the county. It is over 300 years old with multiple original features that require protection as part of our national heritage. It is a focal point for the village, visitors, the local music scene and a vital element in the Kirklees Historic Trail. The Council should do everything to protect a building of such a significant historic, local and national interest.
