The application shows that it is "Invalid", yet still invites comments which, in itself, is misleading and confusing. The extension, as shown on the ground plans, already exists; the previous occupier was granted planning permission in 2001. That extension occupies only a part of the rear of the original building. Is the new occupier wanting to extend a further 8m beyond the wall of the original dwellinghouse along the full length of that house to, in effect, square the building off? Would it be an enormous flat roofed extension? There are very many questions to which answers would be required before neighbours could fully understand just what is being applied for. Would someone, preferably the Planning Officer involved, contact me by email to explain the current situation with this application, please? Thank you.
