More than 'fabric' determines the historic and social significance of a building that has been altered down the years but retains something of its look. A local from 1812 would still recognise the Shears on the Halifax Road side at least. The pub has continued since that time with the same name and there is a continuity of community use and meeting of people stretching back to and before the Luddite meetings that occurred at this location, in this place, despite alterations. The final breaking of this continuity would be regrettable and would remove an important focus point for anyone studying the period of the Luddite uprising in the area.
