Emley is a rural village with already a high volume of traffic travelling through for access to the motorway. I live on Upper Lane and the current infrastructure isn't sufficient to support more houses (with at least 1 car per household) being built in the area. 1 of the access points is on Warburton. This road itself is narrow with cars parked at the road side making access up and down the road difficult. Large construction vehicles would pose a threat to houses, cars and people due to the lack of pavements. Directing more traffic to that area is ludicrous considering it runs along side a children's play area and horses riding is regularly undertaken in the area. Access to the proposed location will be a nuisance and cause unwanted and unnecessary disruption to all within the vicinity. The roads cannot take any more cars, the primary school cannot take any more pupils and the area does not need another housing estate. Millennium Green is situated to the rear of the site which is well maintained and a tranquil area to visit. This will be disturbed by the noise pollution of a building site and have a major impact on the countryside surrounding it.
