This will decimate an area of natural environment and have an irreversible impact on the local community due to the sheer number of people it will bring to the area. It will completely change the area from rural to urban. This is natural farmland and is the reason all current residents live there. I have seen no notes on the provision of new roads, schools, health centres or shops - all of which would be needed and all of which would cause huge disruption, congestion and massive change to a peaceful area of houses and farmland. In an era of climate emergency, removing natural landscape to build houses in an already densely populated area is not at all necessary. Built outwards from towns, don't pack every available inch of space within them.
