I walk my dog around these woods and fields as it's one of the few remaining green spaces locally that isn't developed. It's desperately sad that Kirklees council and the Church of England are happy to lose this, and the wildlife that have their habitats there. Not to mention that the Leeds Country Way runs through this land, the operative word being "country". Once it's gone it will never come back. Local people need this space to breathe not to live on, this is greenbelt land not brownfield, which the current government have pledged to use to build new homes. As residents of Kirklees we all know there are a lot of disused, rundown eyesores that would benefit from development. The idea that the ancient woodlands of Dum Woods and Dogloitch Woods could be used to offset any damage is ridiculous, in no way would they be able to offset the amount of damage caused. This planning application absolutely needs to be bright before the Strategic Planning Committee.
