

The applicant has previously written concerning their thoughts on technical data, which they appeared to suggest ought to be withheld from public scrutiny; instead to be kept between the applicant and the planners.

This latest submission sees significant changes to the social housing proposed, affecting the north of the site. Unfortunately, no new drainage plan has been provided, which was provided concerning previous plans.

- Should I interpret this to mean the planners have received the data, but are withholding it from the public?
- Or, should I interpret it to mean the applicant has failed to provide the revised plan?

Either way, I suggest, it would not look good if the application was forced through to the planning committee meeting, scheduled for 2nd February, with the public right appearing to have been subverted.
