Briestfield has no public facilities anymore what so ever. Before the coronavirus pandemic the shoulder of mutton was a busy, popular pub for both locals and people from further afield which gave a great atmosphere and somewhere for the locals to catch up and many of us are looking forward too that resuming once the pandemic is over. Public amenities such as pubs restaurants etc should not be allowed to be taken away from small villages as they can be the only source of company and social life many people can have. The shoulder of mutton has not been vacant as has been mentioned as there always has been and still is somebody living in the living accommodation which already exists upstairs.
