I strongly support a plaque as former resident of Red House, Mary Taylor, was a champion of women's right long before feminism was heard of. She was an independent women who travelled the world, set up a business in New Zealand, climbed mountains in Switzerland, and I arranged for international guests to visit Red House over the years. Joan Bellamy who wrote the biography of Mary Taylor - "More Precious than Rubies" - launched her book at Red House and is former head of Women's Studies at the Open University. She was born in Liversedge, is age 96 and I would like her to see the plaque whilst she is still about.
