If the wall is unsafe then clearly it needs to be made safe, but I do have concerns about the protected and unprotected trees which line the boundary. Can the works be completed without damage being caused to them? In addition to being a significant source of flooding protection for our street (Holly Tree Grange) on account of the amount of water they absorb, they are also the home to several protected species, including owls and bats. The proximity of many of the trees to the wall does give cause for concern that it may be impossible to complete the works without the trees being damaged and, ultimately, needing to be removed.
