I cannot understand why this building is not listed, it dates back to the 1700s and has rich Luddite history. Planning has been put in before and thankfully each time denied, the pub is situated in a rural area and is home to a variety of wild life which would suffer should the building work be accepted. One of the main reasons around my objection of the pub shutting is the potential effect this could have on the locals mental health and morale, we need to hold onto our history before there is nothing left. Many generations of my family have frequented the shears for every occasion possible, the same goes for my friends who have locally grown up around here the pub holds many memories. This pub is a safe space for plenty of people and still has its same regulars it has always had. I do not believe the current owner is pushing the pubs potential, I personally held a charity event there last year holding around 200 people and raising over £800 on the day for a rare disease charity. I have a friend who has used the shears for her charity event the past three years with the same success. Ideally it needs someone who knows the history of the pub and is proud of it as the community is.
