It is very important that building work does not cause too much disturbance for people living nearby some of whom work from home. So far builders working on the stable at this property have been considerate and this must continue. It would be best if the stable conversion was finished before work starts on the Bylands house so that people living nearby are not having to cope with too much work going on. Bylands is an attractive house built of local stone and it is important that the new house fits into the space well and is appropriate to the Conservation Area. It is also important that any materials such as asbestos are treated with great care when demolishing the house. This was commonly added to plaster until the mid 1980's as well as being used for insulation.
