I would simply urge you, as the planning team to review the significant, very apparent changes to the site over the years using Google maps - it clearly shows the biodiversity radically wiped out over the years and the access created (with no planning approval as far as I am aware). I witnessed this being used on many occasions by a tractor, which was liberally spraying what I assume to be strong pesticide/fungicides/herbicides as a few days later the whole site became brown, with all wildlife dead. I have photos of this happening. I do not consider this to be hopeful for the site to add biodiversity or improvements to the area. I actually assume this would be illegal activity having already taken place on the site. I therefore have great concerns for the future of the site.
