Similar to other comments registered, I find it peculiar that such objection is being raised when there is already a precedent set with neighbouring businesses and, quite frankly, it's a high street. You would expect businesses to come and go, varying in type as demand is needed and the social structure of the village changes. I can appreciate the points raised by the person lodging the objection but then they chose to live on a high street, above a shop. You would have to expect that noise, smells and disruption would be more than those found on a typical residential street. In terms of Oi and it's place in the village - It's evident that Marsden is attracting a more socially diverse, wealthier resident, who would expect such a business to be present and open at times when they can make use of it! It isn't unreasonable to expect a restaurant to be open during hours it's main demographic expects, serving food with reasonable, paired back drink accompaniments as they've outlined. We need this kind of private enterprise to help continue to regenerate the high street and encourage more investment and opportunity. While it being an LGBT business isn't a factor, it certainly highlights the social change mentioned (it is the second now) and shows just how welcoming Marsdeners are.
