This lands is Green belt land, still currently being used as farm land and building this single dwelling would not make any contribution to the housing deficit within Kirklees. There was a container placed at the site many years ago which has served no purpose except for being an eye sore. I can only think this was strategically placed with a view to help with a future application in some way. The applicant is a known property developer of new build projects so if this one house gets planning permission they will sure to be additional applications for further dwellings in the future. Stocksmoor is sketchy at best for public transport so the use of a car(s) would be a necessity for a dwelling built in this location.
