Plans for house building on this same land were submitted within the last two years and planning permission was refused. What has changed in order to overturn this decision? It appears that protected trees are at risk of being cut down. What validity therefore has a TPO if it can be removed at will? What special remedial action is planned to minimise the high risk of movement/subsidence due to the significant presence of coal mining referral areas? As an area there is a shortage of School places, Doctors and Dentists of which many of which are over subscribed. Surely this should pose a serious consideration for any planning approval.
