I would like to object to the erection of 75 dwellings. There just isn't the infrastructure. Traffic is already congested around that area at school times. Doctors and schools are already full.

75 New homes could mean up to 300 people and lots more cars in the area. Can the current drainage system cope with that? I know the roads can't.

Why would this go ahead when previous applications for the site have been rejected? If it does I'd like to know the answer to that.
