A community benefits when residents have opportunities to meet, learn, volunteer and support one another. Al-Hira provides a setting where these positive relationships can develop. Places of worship can also encourage charitable activities and greater understanding between people from different backgrounds. I recognise that residents may have legitimate questions about parking and disturbance. These deserve consideration but the comments I've seen are hugely exaggerated, but they should be weighed alongside the wider benefits that the facility can deliver. The people objecting would have you believe that the whole of Moldgreen is on the move in those 30 mins on a Friday that the centre is being occupied. If it was such a major problem, the volunteers could easily have been approached and I'm sure if busses were having issues they would have written to the management by now. The deliberate mischaracterisation of an entire community is unfair. I am concerned this could overshadow the application itself, which actually proposes several measures to reduce local parking issues and congestion. I believe the proposal offers a positive contribution to community life in Dalton and Moldgreen where I have lived for around 20 years and that appropriate planning conditions can help ensure its continued responsible operation.
