With such historical importance with it's involvement in the Luddite uprising The Shears pub should not only be saved now but from future demolition. We have a statue not half a mile away commemorating the Luddites so why not follow suit with making the pub a landmark and a place where future generations can come and learn about one of the most historically significant periods in Kirklees? Also the pub itself is a great establishment and far too many good pubs are disappearing for good. If this trend is allowed to continue then the traditional public house we all know will be as distant a memory as the Battle of Rawfolds Mill
